Updating my review - I just want to thank Drew for this awesome course. I took it twice to make sure I truly understood how to create an email template from scratch. Since taking this course, I've made over $7k building Email templates for clients on Upwork, AND, today 6/7/2021 I started a new job. I am officially an HTML Email Developer for Activision!

Thanks Drew!

Hi Anthony, thanks so much for your review of the HTML Email course. Would it be cool if I referred to your testimonial in my promotion of the course?

This course is an amazing hands-on introduction to the world of responsive HTML emails. Drew delivers the course with an impeccable attention to detail, and you'll come away from the course having created a dark mode compatible responsive HTML email. That seems like quite the feat for a course that's only a few hours long. As someone who's interested in developing this skill set to possibly change careers, it's an invaluable resource for me.

It's worth noting that I found the lessons in the course to be extremely fast paced and jam-packed with information. In order to follow along, I had to pay close attention to absolutely everything Drew said and did. This meant pausing the video constantly in order to execute the code and comparing it to Drew's code to make sure I'd done it correctly. There's seldom any filler or strictly conceptual lecturing to break up or slow down the action. I will say that Drew does give clear and concise explanations for most (if not all) of the steps he takes in the lessons, but these tended to go in one ear and out the other because I was more focused on replicating the code properly.

Now that I've gone through the course and built the template, I feel like I should go through the videos again to simply watch and listen (rather than coding along), in order to understand the "how + why" of it more. I think that folks with more experience in the worlds of web/email design/development will be able to digest the information more easily than I did. Either way, this seems to be tremendous value for $40. While I still have a lot to learn and understand about coding emails, it gave me such a solid introduction to continue on this path. Plus, you get a ton of bonus material, including an HTML email signature template. (Custom HTML email signatures alone can go for up to $150 on Fiverr.) Overall, I'd highly recommend this course to any self-motivated learner.
